See page 118. In compression, absorption, and combination compression and absorption plants, the Cochrane Steam-Stack Heater takes care of all surplus exhaust steam about the plant, as well as hot drips, without regard to the quantity. The pumps, for instance, may produce either more or less steam than is required for heating the boiler feed water. If more, the excess, already purified of oil, will be available for making ice; if less, it will be supplemented by the engine exhaust. There is no waste. In plants where the exhaust steam is used largely for heating in the winter and for ice making or refrigerating in the summer, the Steam-Stack Heater serves the purpose of both systems most conveniently. The heater shown on page 120 is installed in an absorption refrigerating plant, where it receives the exhaust of pumps and other...
