Description of Athens. --Purchase of a slave. --Timon the misanthropist. --A public entertainment. --The environs of Athens. --Moral system of Lasthenia. At night Lasthenia invited me to accompany her the next day to the city, where she was about to purchase a slave. We set off very early in the morning, and entered Athens by the road that leads to the Academy, and which is planted with cypresses. Here, said Lasthenia, you can scarcely take a single step without walking over the ashes of a hero. There, continued she, are the altars of the Muses, of Mercury, of Hercules, and of Minerva. That large olive-tree, to your right, is the second that arose in Attica. Those are the tombs of Thrasybulus, of Pericles, of Chabrias, and of Phormio. There are the cenotaphs of our brave warriors who have died in battle; and on the columns near them are engraved their names and countries. As we entered Athens, I said to her, Your city appears to me very ill-built. The streets are narrow, crooked, and extremely irregular, and the houses are in general mean and inconvenient. These external staircases and projecting upper stories disfigure the appearance of the buildings, intercept the light, and confine the circulation of the air. Those herms of stone, in a cubic form, at the doors of the houses, also offend the eye. I prefer those altars covered with turf, that stand close to them,...
